In the 2000's Tianjin, most people were living in mid rise buildings; however, in the center of the city, there were so many high rise buildings under construction while still some old communities contained single story buildings because of the high land price. On the streets, the main colors of transportation were red, yellow and white: red taxi, yellow minivan and white Santana (a model from Volkswagen, popular in 2000 China). The amount of bicycles was larger than the automobiles. During this period, there were many contrasting objects and views on the streets. This was the point that the society of most Chinese cities started to have great development, from the people's recognition of beauty, from the public's deep pursuit of life quality, from the city's meaning to each single person.
